Psychologist Explains Services to Students

8:13 a.m.—Arrive at school; check appointment schedule with secretary.
8:15 a.m.—Review case notes on child; parents due at 8:30.

8:32 a.m.—Parents arrive. Thus begins a typical day in the life of a school psychologist.

If things go according to schedule, buy 4:47 that afternoon he should have met with the parents and teachers of the child in question, performed a test battery on another student who was having difficulties, consulted with a teacher regarding a behavior problem of a third child; held a staff meeting with the teacher of the educationally handicapped class, the principal, and the school nurse; and met with at least one more set of parents.

WHAT MIGHT take place at each encounter was described by Paul Needles, Torrance school psychologist, during a talk before the Educational Council of Torrance. Needles was one of four panelists featured in a program on services provided by the guidance and psychology department.

Background on the addition of psychologists to school faculties in California was related by Robert Dollahide, guidance consultant.

"THE PROFESSION of school psychologist made its first great leap forward in California in 1947," Dollahide said, "when the state legislature required all school elementary districts with more than 900 students to establish classes for the mentally retarded. Legal requirements for determining children's eligibility for enrollment in these special classes were specified by the legislature. To meet the requirements, the services of school psychologists were necessary." Since that time, Dollahide stated, the number of school psychologists in California has grown to 700 and 36 other states have begun using them.

"IN TORRANCE, we have grown from using half the time of the school attendance officer as school psychologist in 1948 to eight full-time psychologists last year," Dollahide said. During the 1965-66 school year 1,602 students were tested and counseled.
